Dogs can get Contagious Canine Cough (CCC) directly from other dogs OR just from where other dogs have been.

Anywhere dogs meet is an opportunity for your dog to catch CCC. Bugs that cause CCC can be passed through the air, live in water and even on our clothes.

In puppies, CCC can be more serious and occasionally fatal. Before your dog goes into training classes or any other environments where other dogs are or have been, make sure they are vaccinated to protect them.

Are you going on holiday? It's likely that kennels will require your dog to be vaccinated, particularly against CCC.

If your dog is coughing and you need to come to see us about it, we may ask you to wait in the car and not the waiting room. This is to avoid the risk of spreading the infection to our other patients.

We know how much dogs love going for a W-A-L-K but they can pick up CCC from other dogs.

Even in the safest of environments, CCC may be lingering!

Even other dogs you know quite well may pass on the infection to your dog without showing signs. It is always a good idea to check with owners of your doggy's pals that they are also protected against CCC as well as ensuring your own dog is protected, to help keep them healthy.
